Dedication

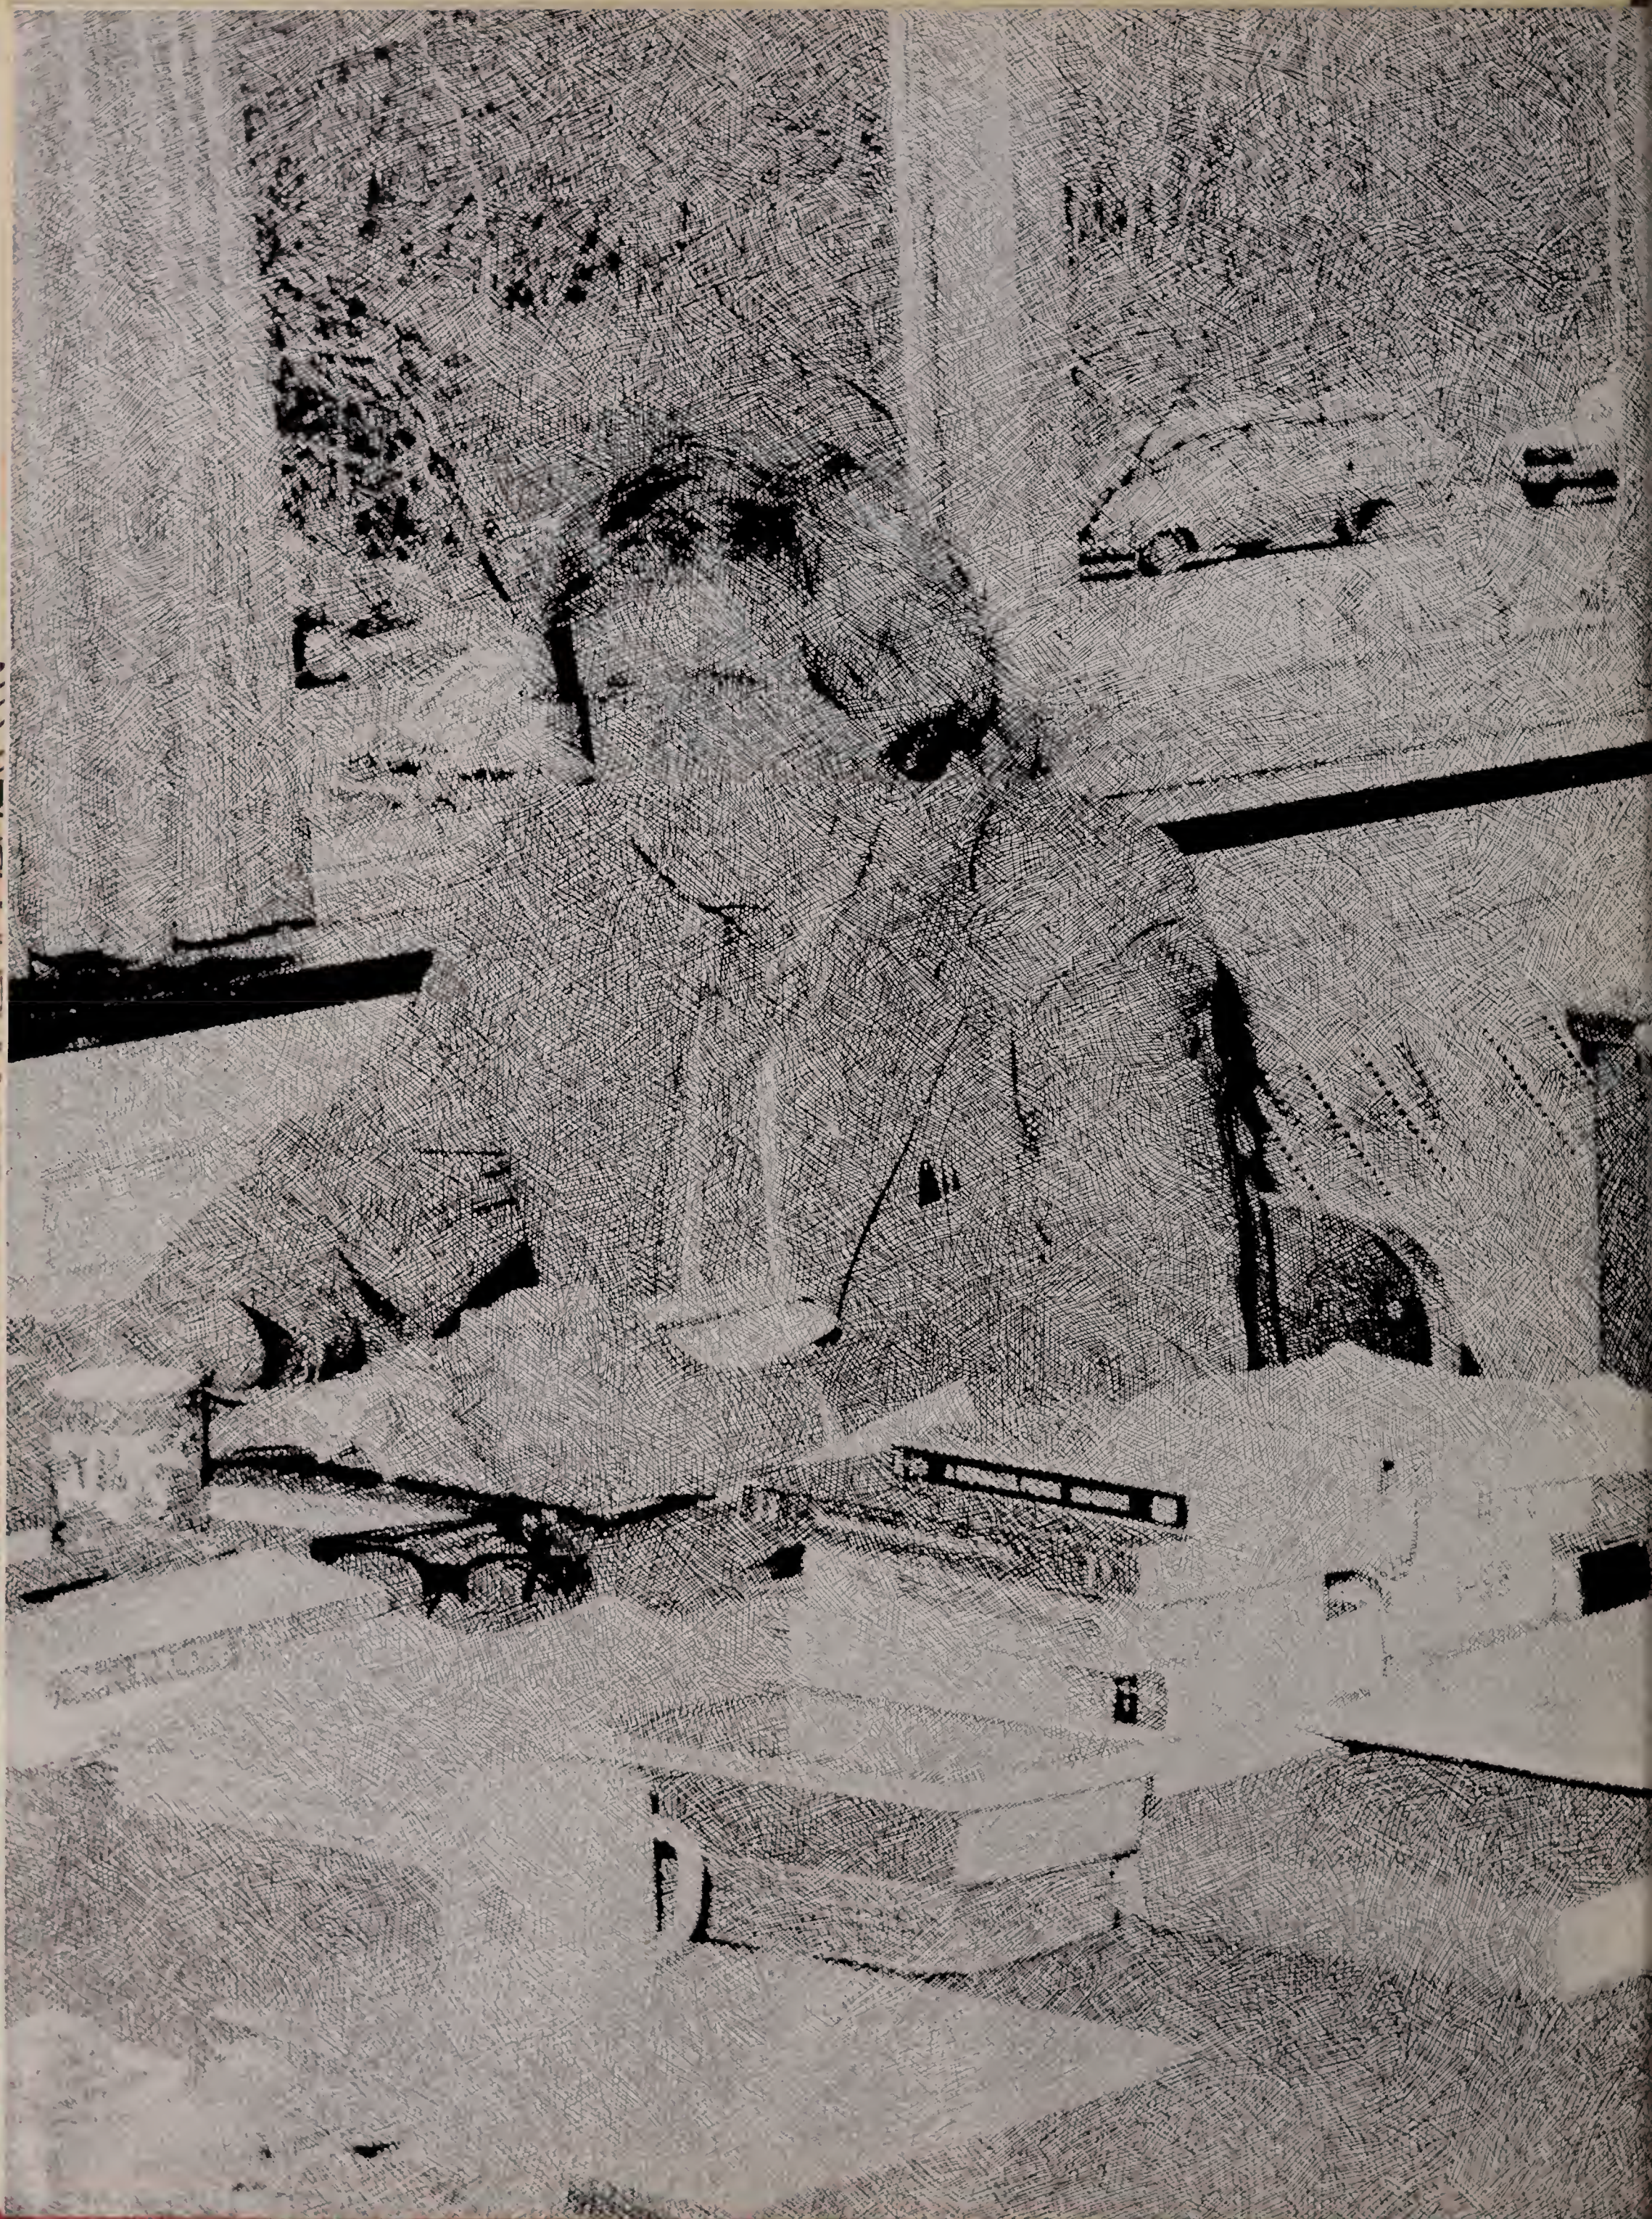

Once in a great while there comes an opportunity to work with a dynamic, selfless and interested individual. We, the Class of 1978, have had the great fortune to know such a person. Some of us met Mr. Blodgett as freshmen, either in homeroom or through track. Most did not come to appreciate his role as our advisor that first year, but we soon became a unified class, due largely to his efforts.

Since then, Mr. Blodgett has advised us, pushed us, encouraged us and taught us. What he has given us is beyond measure. So on an occasion when mere words cannot express appreciation, actions must speak louder. Therefore, it is with deepest thanks and affection that we, the Class of 1978, dedicate this yearbook to our advisor, Everett Blodgett.

Faculty

A goal . . . an aspiration . . . a smile . . . a shared sadness . . . a spark of the knowledge through which we can begin to understand ourselves . . . a chance . . .

For years we have received, through the efforts of others, those things that compose our minds, our futures, and our identities. We now take on the task of returning those experiences: we must neatly compact the many years into a tiny expression of words — to be wrapped with images and tied together by memories — and modestly presented as recompense for everything . . . "Thank You"

In Memoriam

ARA KARAKASHIAN

1915-1978

During the years 1976 and '77 Reading witnessed the loss of three of its most active, productive, and excellent citizens, Walter Hawkes, David Castine, and Bill O'Keefe. Some of us talked about bad times for Reading High, but I expect that few realized more was to come. News of Ara A. Karakashian's death on January 20, 1978, left everyone who was acquainted with him, in addition to a great many others, somewhat stunned — not grieved, at first, but stunned.

Mr. Karakashian vacated a position that looked impossible to replace with one other man alone. His influence and the benefits of his experience and competence were immediately missed in many unexpected places, as well as in his common duties at school. His friends were dismayed, and perhaps even a bit angry, that he had gone at a time when his warmth and integrity were so much in need.

But Ara would have scolded me already for having wasted so much time on these very words; therfore, I wish to end briefly. It is only necessary that Ara be remembered and that his honesty and love will affect our own actions. There is really only one great regret at his loss — that more people did not come to know and appreciate him in his time.

In Memoriam

David Castine

1929-1977

Whenever we reflect upon those who have helped us to grow during these years, we will think of Mr. David Castine. His was a devotion so complete that there was little he would not do for us in whatever capacity we needed help. Mr. Castine was a man who gave of himself freely. He deeply loved his family, his friends, and the students, and our happiness and success was always of utmost concern to him.

Mr. Castine died on December 9, 1977. How he died is not important. What we will remember is how he lived, for his attitudes, his dedication to his work, and his devotion towards those he loved serve as examples for all of us to follow.

A SPORTS REVIEW

The year is 1977 and the local cross-country stars have just piloted their team to another memorable tally of victories. After a few weeks of contented reminiscence and self-admiration, the team puts away its trophies, letters, and headlined newspaper articles — and eventually even those pompously decorated jackets — and wonders seriously: "Are the rewards worth the effort?" Their immediate answer is "Yes," but the athletes often find it difficult to explain why this answer is so decided. Perhaps the reason is only obvious to someone who can view the sports scene from the outside — someone who can see and judge it clearly because it isn't hidden by the bridge of their nose.

The fact is, sports are fun. And being fun, they are also fulfilling and tend to promote better relations between the persons who participate in them. What practical ends do athletics serve? Probably none, except to consume the athlete's time and money so that they stay out of trouble. For those people who consider sports the road to an elevated social position, let me assure you that few of our students will ever be intelligent enough to plot their notoriety in so devious a manner. And if you think that athletics provides serious preparation for the competitiveness of adult society — you had better think twice. If civilized existence were as comparatively simple as all that, insanity wouldn't be on the incline, as it is now.

Let us focus on one sport in particular — soccer — and see if there is any good at all gained by it (except, of course, blissful enjoyment). Reading High's '77 soccer team was obviously a witless aggregation of social derelicts, who derived a seeming delight from the contact of their heads with a checkered playground ball. Despite such ridiculous activities, fans consistently overlooked the players' peculiarities, as they viewed in awe the "skill" with which the players manipulated the ball to their heads. I might have never imagined that absurdity could be carried to so extreme a point. To those who insist that soccer develops coordination and muscle tone, let me say only this: if total degradation is the price, it is barely worth the trouble.

To continue, there are some who would say that there is no "fun" in such sports as football or wrestling; there is only skill, glory, and defeat. I would rather say that our football "heroes" and wrestlers were simply fools who refused to manifest the enjoyment of their sport. These emotionally incomplete males should have observed the example of their female counterparts on the '77 field hockey team. The Rocket girls were completely uninhibited about their rediscovery of the joy of the physical abuse of other human beings. Though their fathers viewed their bruised legs and battered wrists with horror, the girls found these trifling pains only incidental to their pursuit of satisfaction; the more enthusiastic they were, the darker were their black and blues. Perhaps our Rocket males might have been more entirely successful, had they admitted to the erotic pleasure of wrecking heads and bodies.

Yet, there is still a more disgusting form of "fun" than this destructive perversion that is characteristic of the physical sports — the amusement called track. I consider track to be the evolutionary terminus of all of man's most vile habits. And my suspicion is substantiated by the example of the spear-throw-and-groan contest that was carried on by certain members of the girls' track team. Such competition was torture to watch. Still, I suppose that this sport was no better than the one in which tracksters leapt onto soft cushions for several hours at a time. And we must never forget the idiots who ran after each other in endless circles until they began to vomit.....

But we cannot keep on like this forever, the nostalgia would kill us all. Besides, my point is obvious: that sports are fun. We need only remember our golf team to prove that.

Sheila Gash
Australia
A.F.S.

How can I express what my A.F.S. year has been like, what the friends I have made have meant to me, or how much Reading has become a part of my life? All I know is the tears I shed leaving Australia will be nothing compared to when I leave my school, friends, and especially my American family. All three played such an important part in my year.

Through field hockey, powder-puff football, skiing, the Senior Play, Model U.N., A.F.S., and Glee Club I have come to know so many people who I can now say are my friends. With them I have had unforgettable times. I could never thank those people enough, who accepted me after such a short time.

My family was fantastic. I could not have asked for anyone better to take the place of my irreplaceable family back home. With them I have done so many things, and had so many wonderful times. Words cannot express how I feel towards them.

My year was not just a time of fun though, I also learned a lot about myself when I had to adjust to different things. From my family and my friends I learned so much about the American way of life. Football, food, and fun will always remind me of America, as well as Halloween, Thanksgiving, and a Christmas with snow. I hope others learned also learned things of Australia, other than the fact that we have kangaroos.

Time passed so quickly, but what a time it was. With so many fond memories of R.M.H.S., the people that are now my friends, and my family, I look forward to the time when I can return.

I leave with everyone my deepest thanks for making my year what it was — fantastic!!

Linda Jones
Finland
A.F.S.

Last summer I experienced a new language, a new country, and adopted a new family — I spent my summer in Finland.

My first and largest barrier to overcome was the language. The Finnish language is one of the most difficult languages to learn. I was lucky since everyone in my Finnish family spoke English, except my Finnish mother. This didn't stop me from learning simple words that I might need outside of my home. My Finnish words spoken with an American accent often attracted the attention of the native Finnish people. I quite often got the look of "there's a foreigner."

When I left the United States I hardly knew what my Finnish family would be like. When I arrived I found out they are very friendly, but shy people. When I first arrived, I was treated as a guest in the Wendt home, but as soon as I was asked to do household jobs I knew I had been accepted as one of the family. I was treated like a daughter by the parents and like a sister by the two girls (Marianne, 20 and Anne, 17). I got along the best with the youngest girl.

While I was in Finland I had the opportunity to go to school. Their schools are totally different from ours. They are all academic. They don't have sports and social activities as we have in our school systems.

The country itself wasn't hard to adjust to. It is beautiful. There were lots of trees, open fields, and lakes on the countryside and the cities were clean and pleasant to be in. I saw a lot of the country traveling by car.

The Finnish culture was fun to be a part of. I had a good time trying new foods, seeing Russia, and finding out waht a real sauna is like. I could never have experienced this in Reading in ten weeks.

My experiences in Finland will be ones I will never forget. A.F.S. made it possible for me to meet new people and experience a new way of living.

CLASS of '78
Ed Schloth '78

Senior Class Officers and Advisor

Serving outside the classroom is a great enjoyment to me. I have known more Seniors this year than ever before and have known them better. We have had a chance to work together, laugh together, serve one another and others, and grow together.

As R.M.H.S. prepares to lose the "Class of 78" I have a few thoughts I would like to share with you. Each one of you will leave to work for your careers and strive for your dreams, but you will carry with you feelings of your friends, ideas of your teachers and administrators, and love of your parents. They have served you! But equally important, you will have left your mark with them.

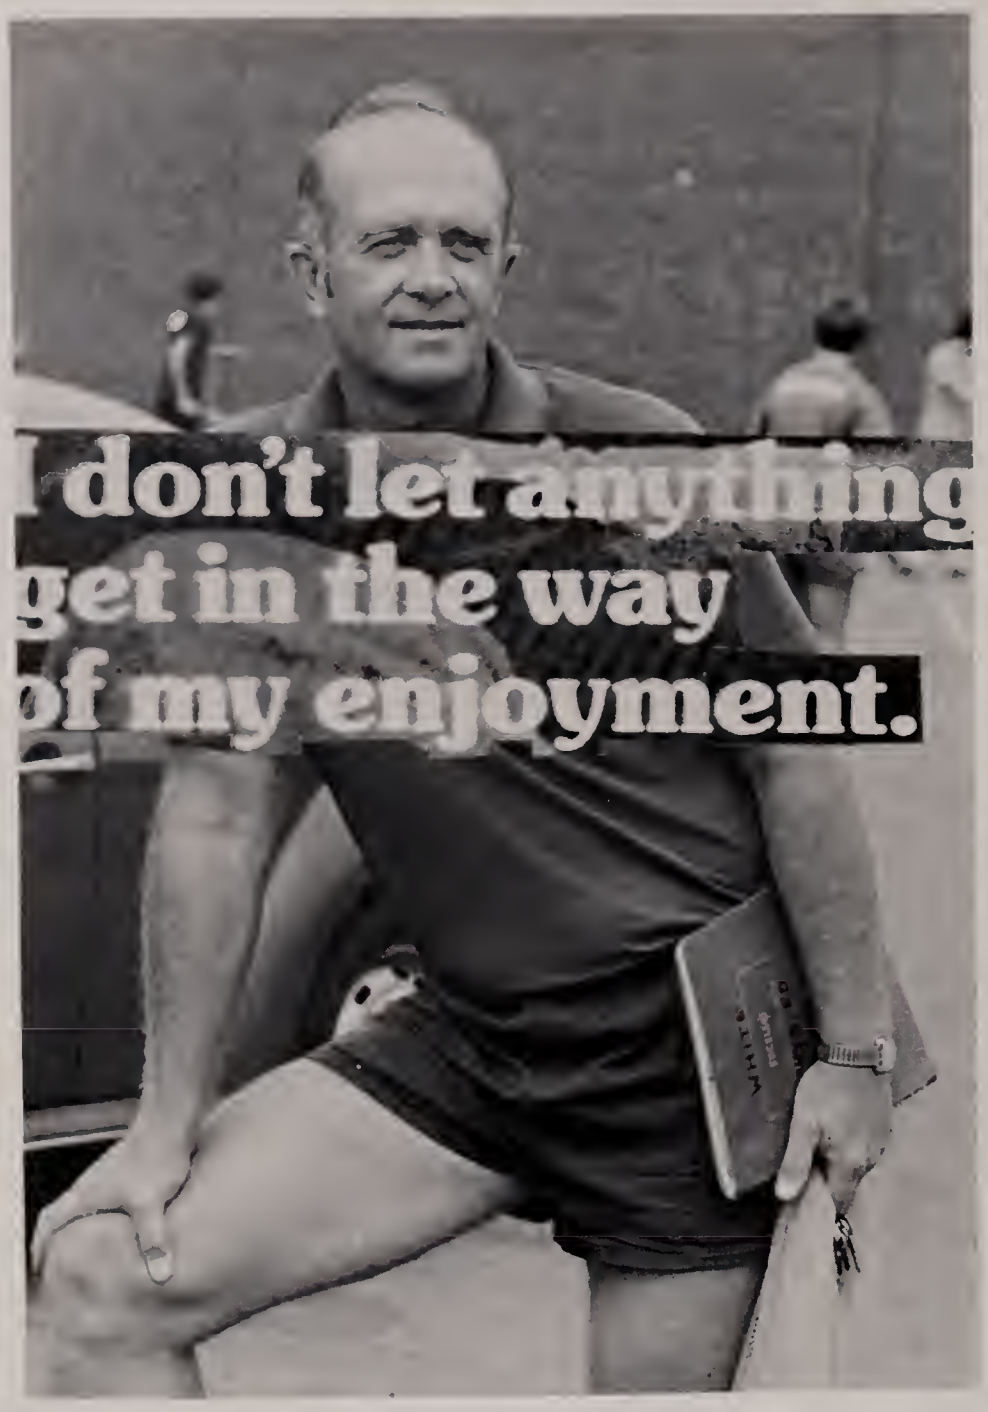

It is my hope that we have contributed to you maturity, wisdom, knowledge and meaning to life. That you as a greater person will leave this building to carry the character that "Reading" has tried to instill to the world. Choosing integrity to expediency, learning to serve yourself by serving others, and that every end is just the beginning.

Thank you for letting me share your senior year.

Sincerely,

Uncle Ed

COOKIELAND LOST

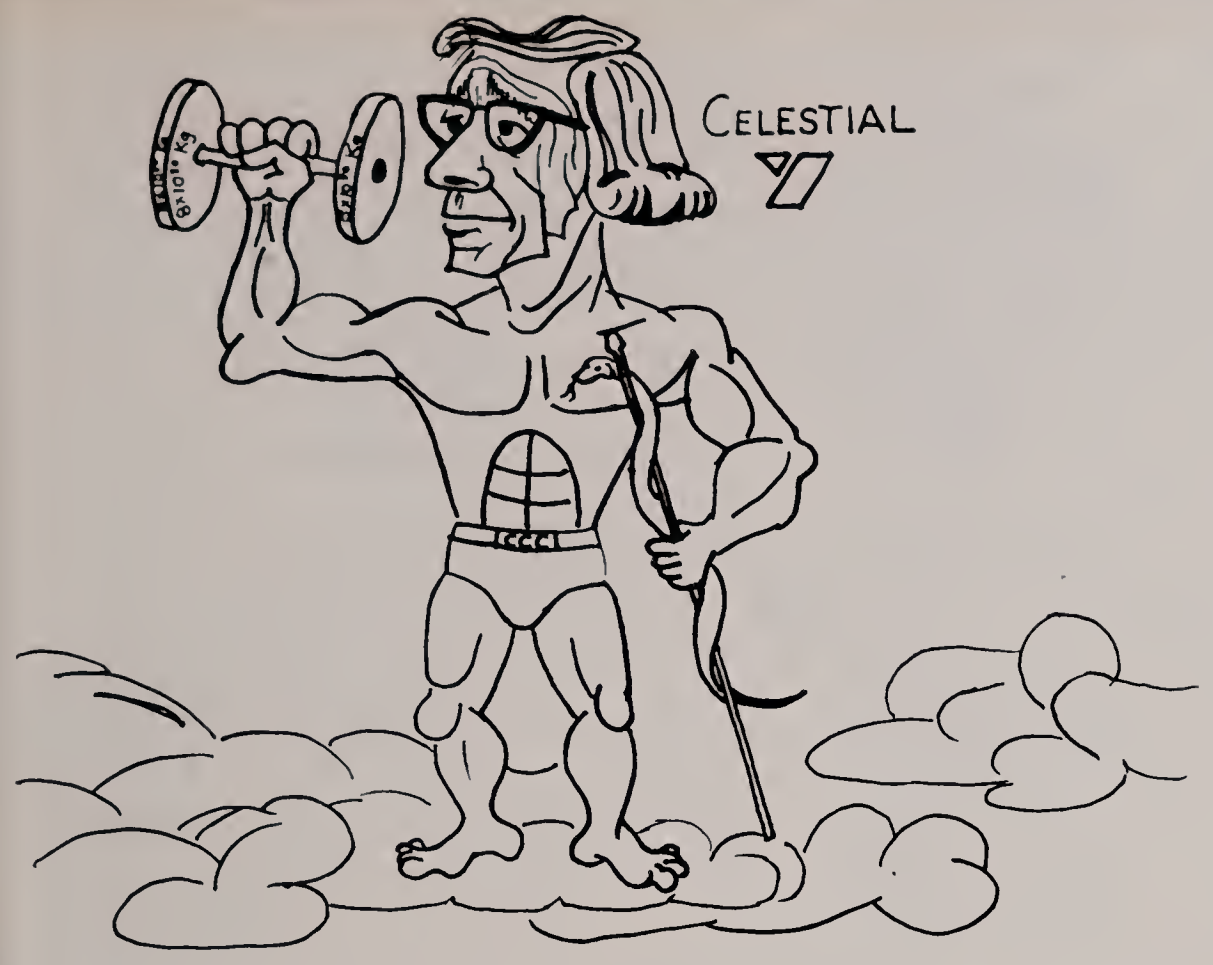

The inspiring story of the origin of a high school.

by Ron Ellis
Peter Myers

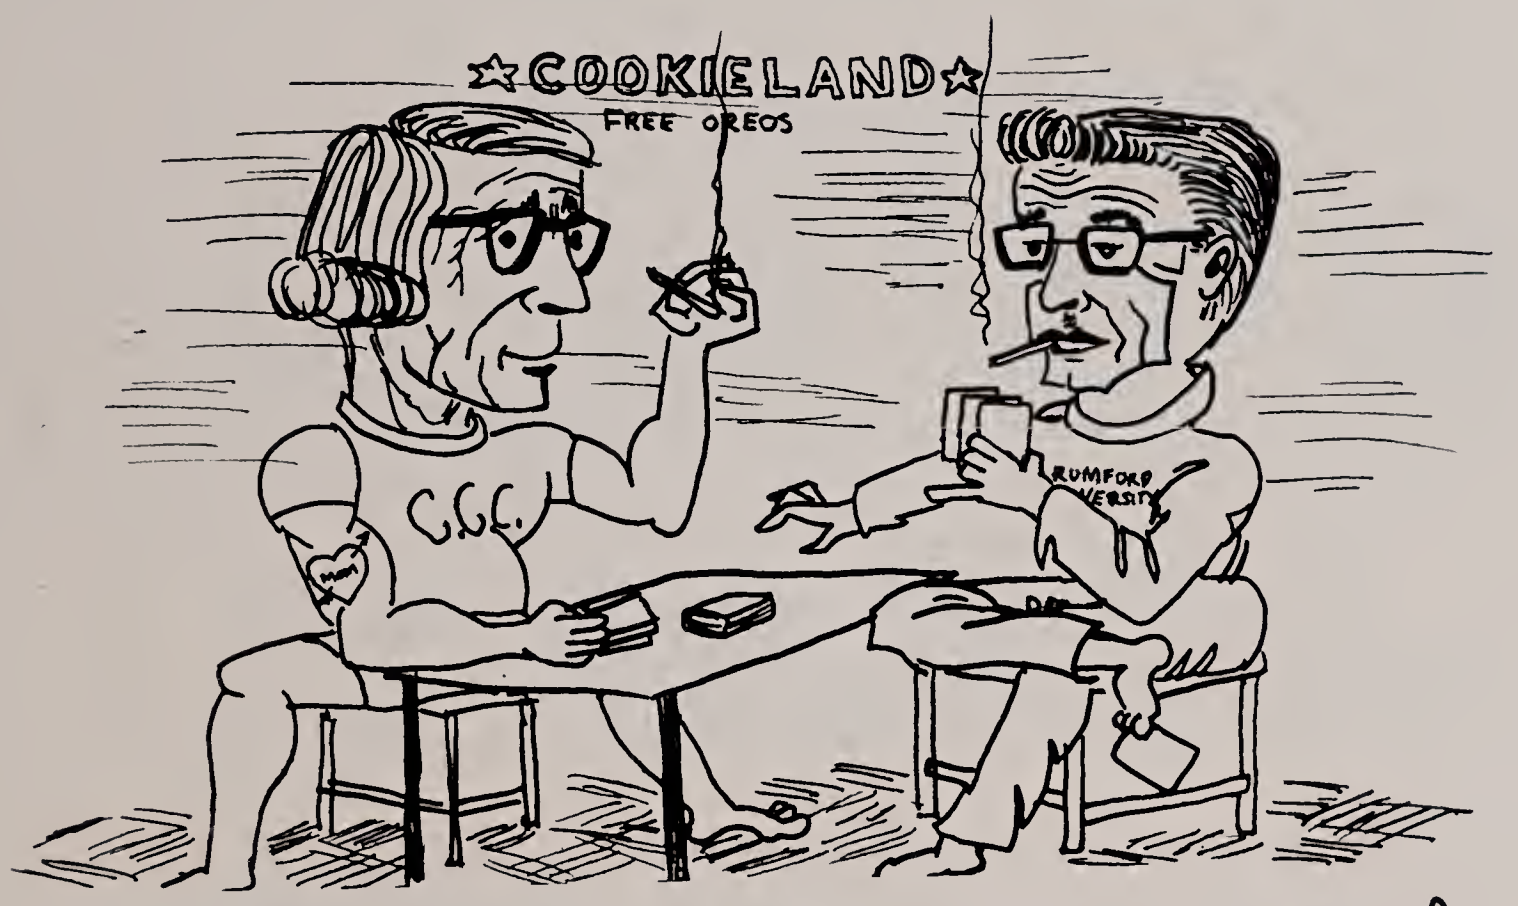

In the beginning. . . . .

. . . . . there was CAHILL.

Collossal Cosmic Cahill was supreme and benevolent master of the universe— merciful despite his unsurpassed strength. He perpetuated his marvelous physique by working out at the Celestial "Y" three times a week.

At Cahill's left hand sat James T. Murphy, king of the flocks of Angels in Cahill's vast ethereal realm.

But Murphy was secretly jealous of Cahill. He would retreat to his secret scientific laboratory for days on end, desperately scheming to overthrow Cahill with the power of his magical lab coat. His greatest plan was to create a monster — Blodgettstein — to conquer Cahill with unmatchable bionic strength.

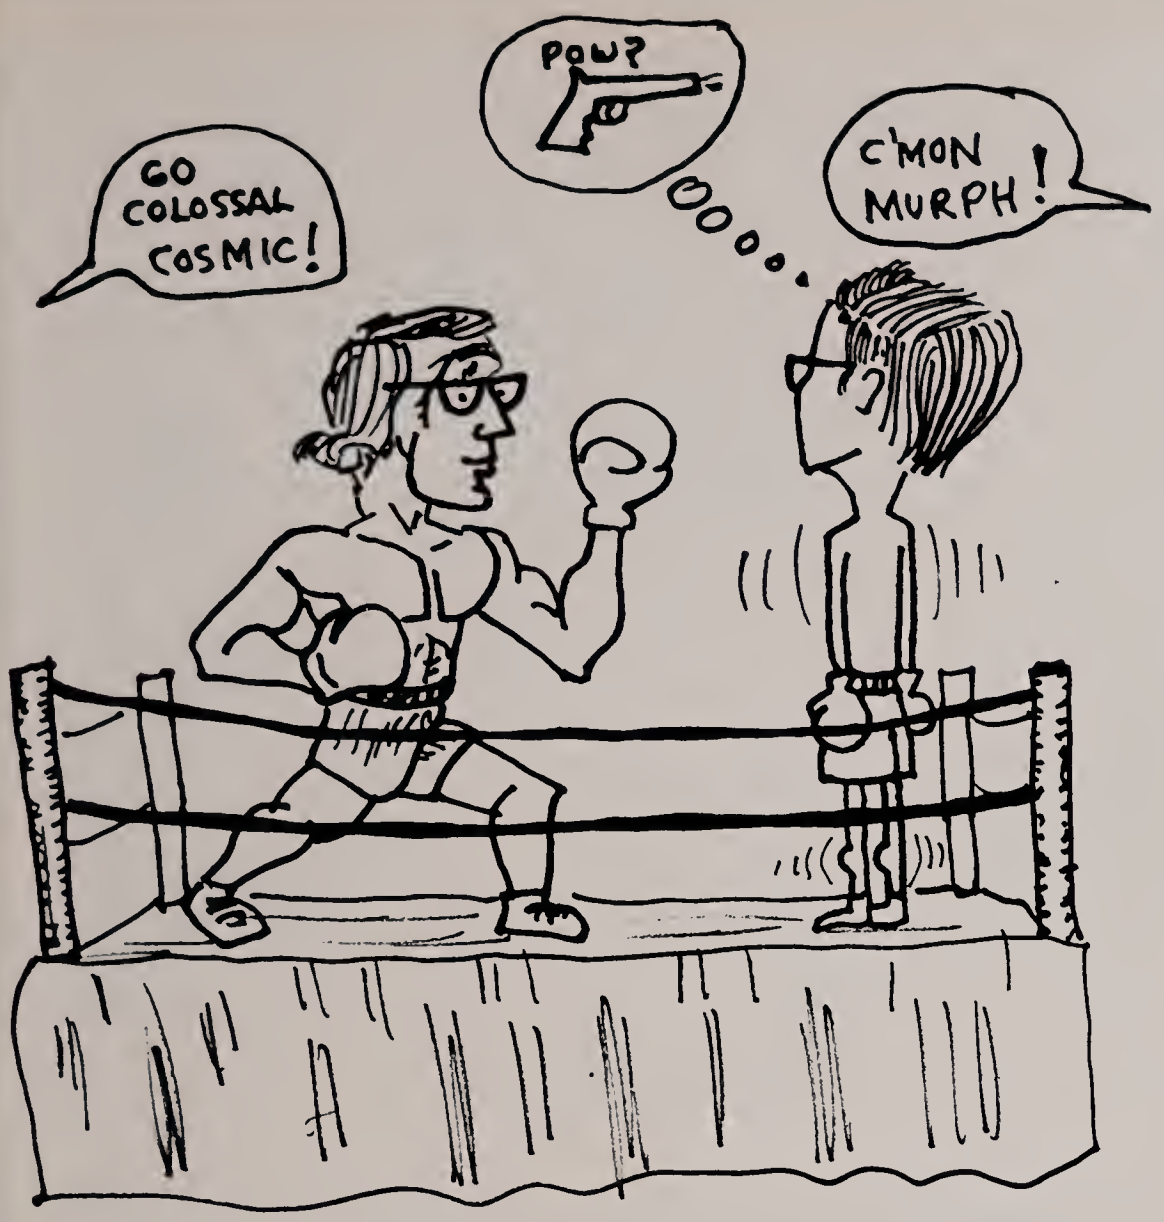

But Murphy found magic insufficient for his purposes. So he called upon the multitudes of Angels to come to his aid. With promises of great power in the new Metaphysical Empire, he persuaded several of the Angels to follow him: among these were Ken Feit, Angel of Nature and Ron Howland, Angel of Youth.

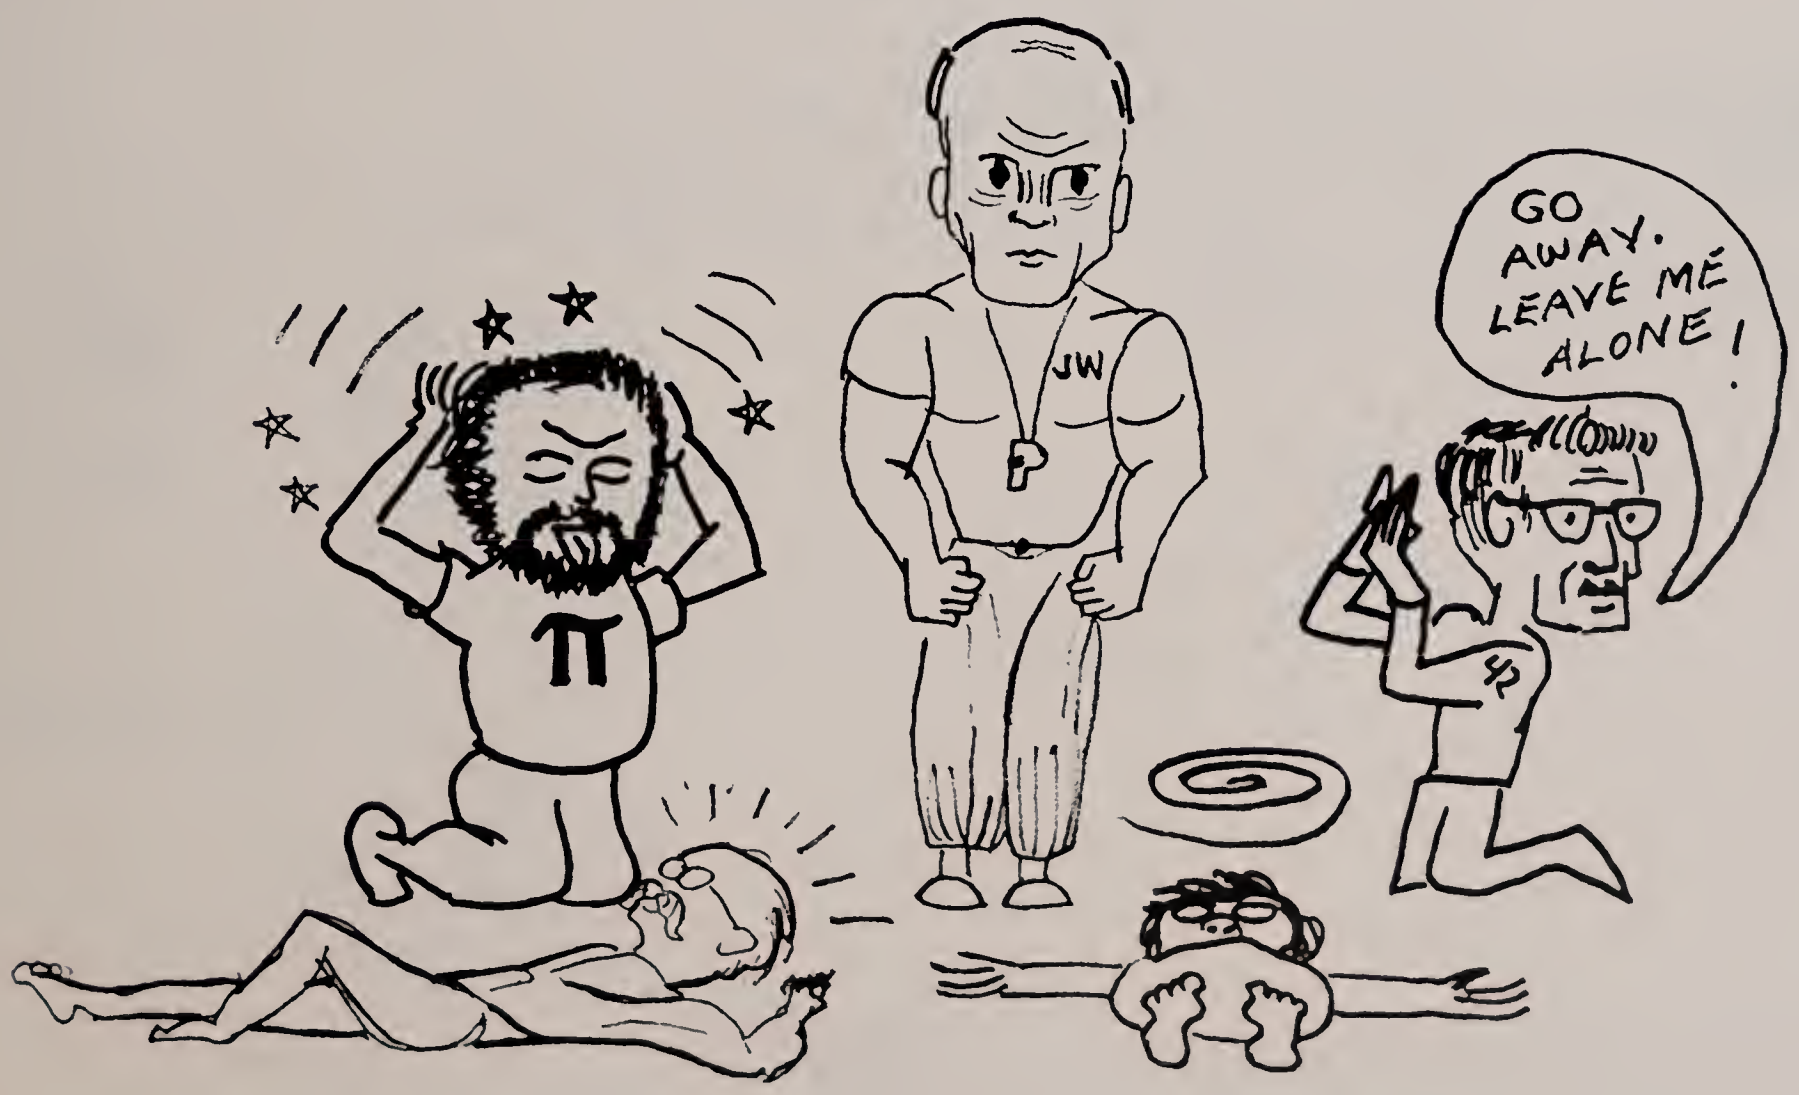

Murphy's new allies then convinced their cunning friend, Cupid Lovely, Angel of Mirth and Wine to join them — and together the conspirators celebrated the coming overthrow of Cahill the tyrant. Cupid Lovely then shot one of his arrows of love into Cahill . . . . .

. . . . . so that he fell in love with the gorgeous Barbara Nevils, Angel of Beauty and fertility. But Alas! Cahill could never possess her, for she was made of chalk and would disintegrate at a touch.

Realizing that Cahill was in the weakening grip of love, Murphy challenged him to battle. The fight lasted into the tenth con, but Cahill, of course, was victor, and resumed his place as celestial emperor.

And he banished Murphy and his evil crew to meat grinders on the practice field with Jack White for all eternity.....

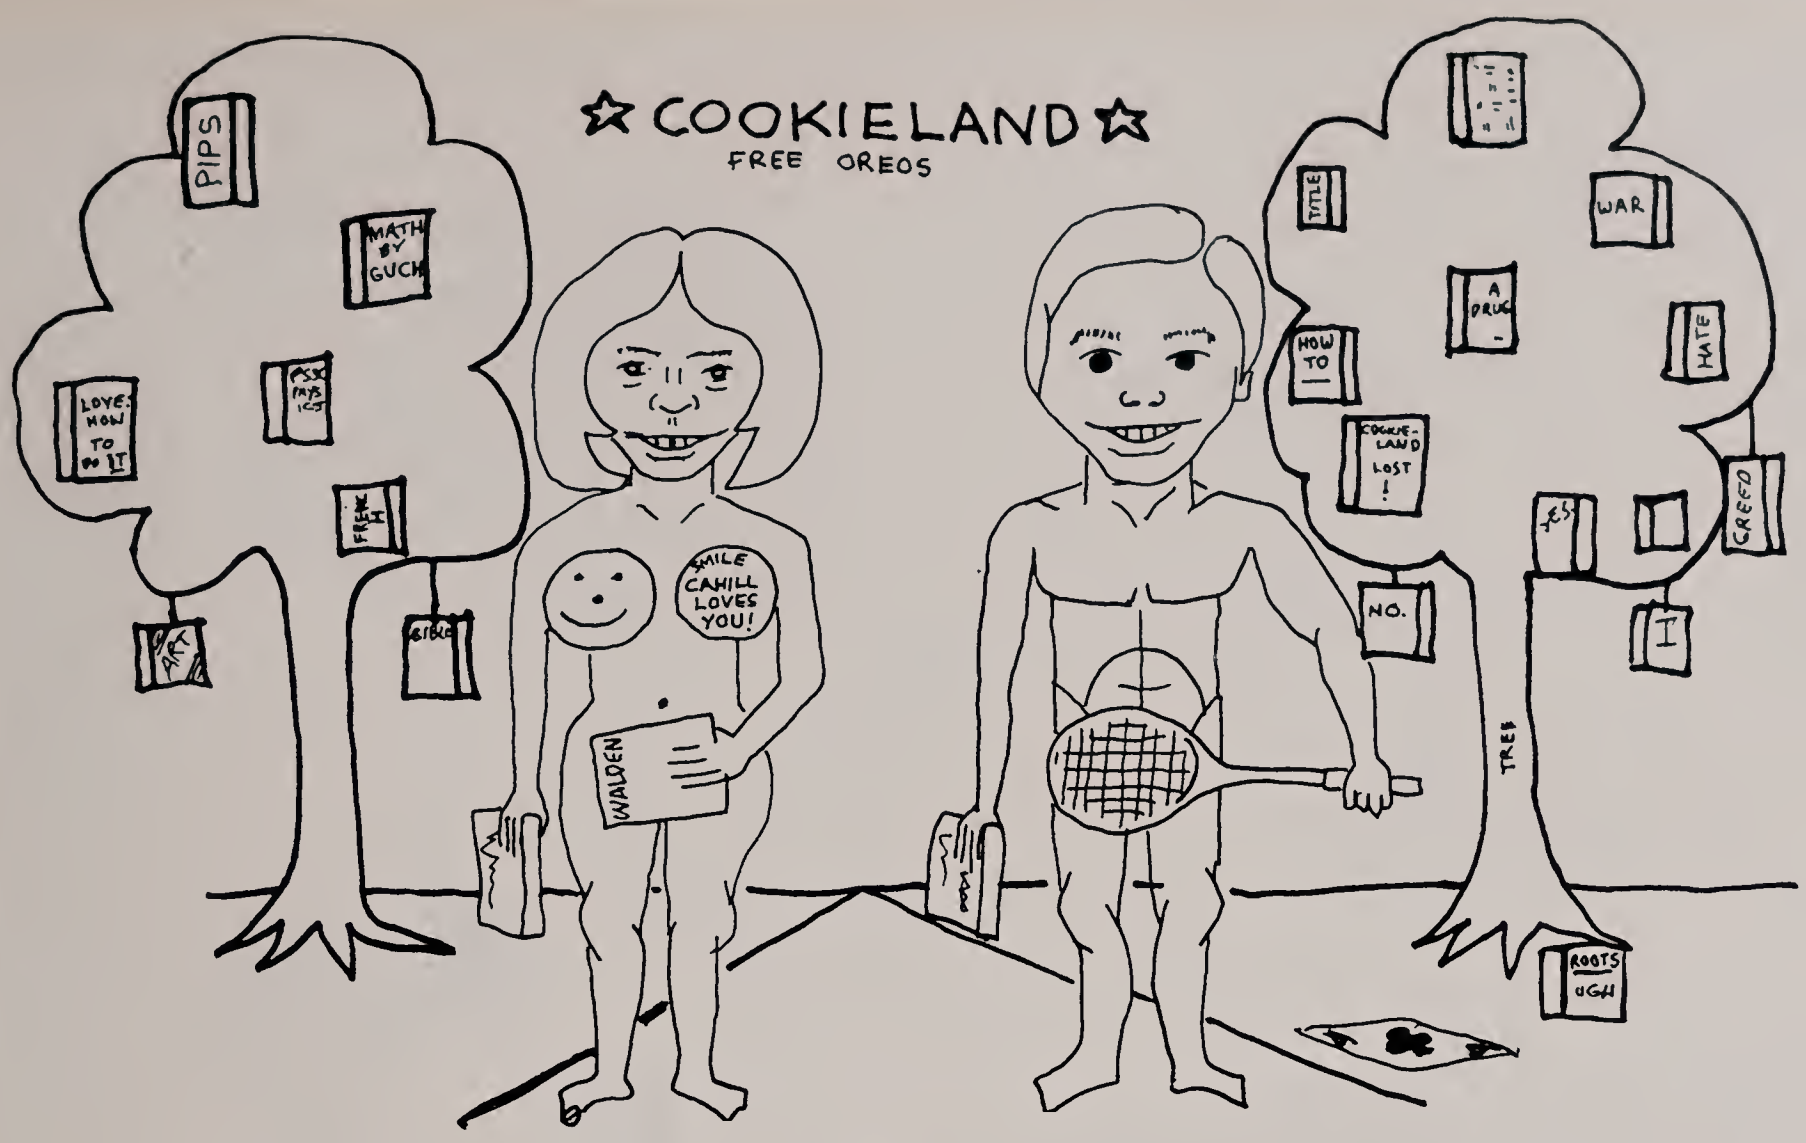

Now, with all his best angels gone, Cahill became lonely. He sat among his weight lifting equipment thinking.....

Finally, Cahill had a brainstorm — he would become a creator! Summoning all of his universal powers he said,

"Let there be literature!"

And there was literature. Thus Cahill sat, enjoying his literature for quite a long time, until he eventually became lonely once more.

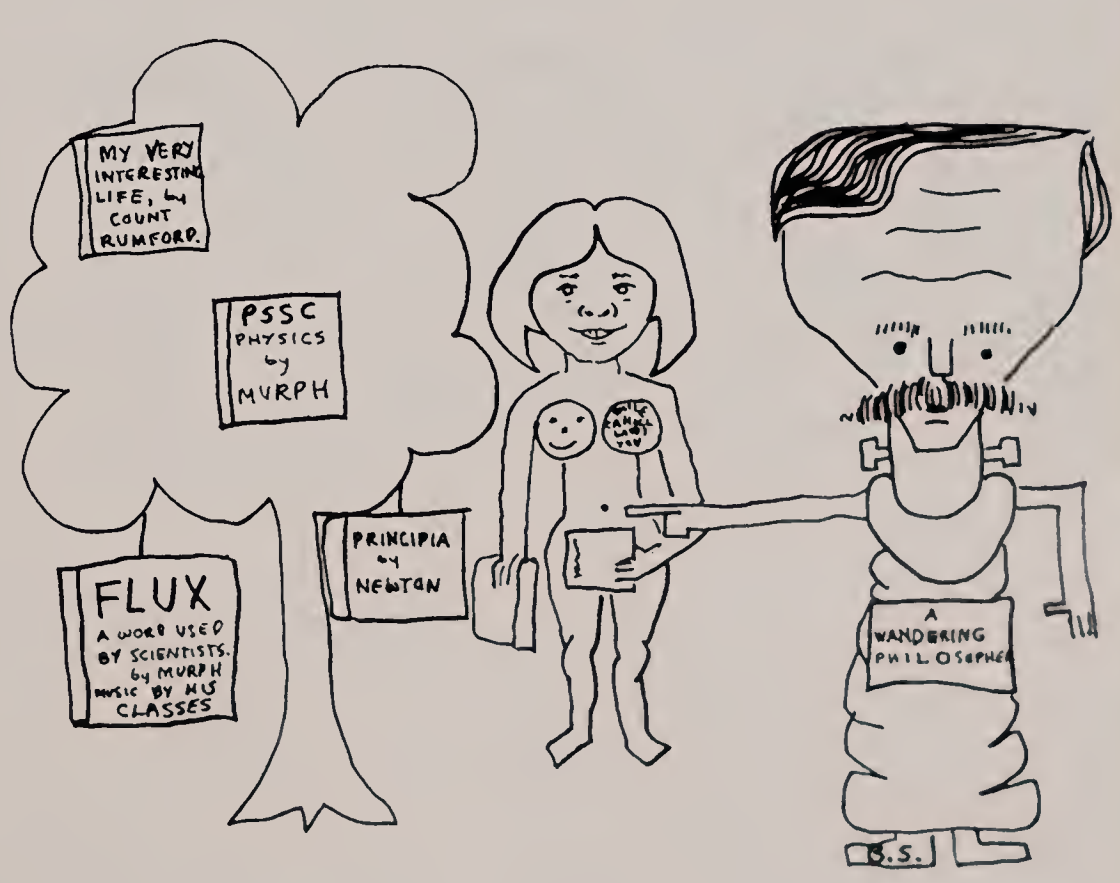

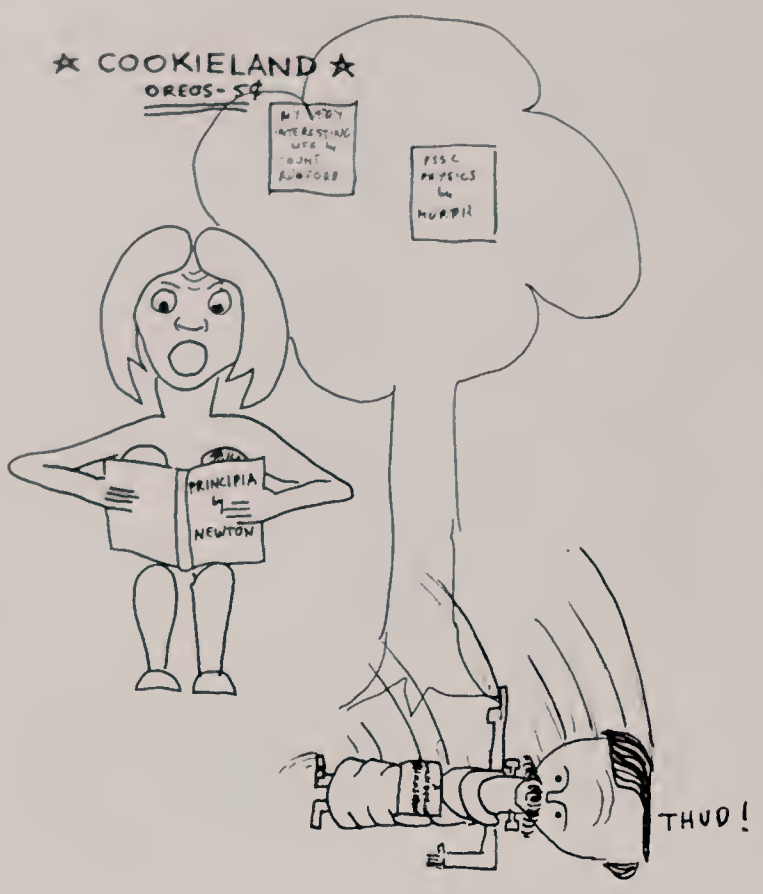

...And this was how the students Steve and Anne came to be. They lived in a wonderful paradise called COOKIELAND, where books and stationery grew abundantly on the trees and they were exceedingly happy. And Cahill looked on his creations and said "THIS IS GOOD!"

Well, in the meantime Murphy had escaped his torture (using his acceleration to increase force: F=ma), and was now scheming to demolish Cahill's new creation. He had completed the terrible bionic monster, Blodgettstein, and planned to use him in destroying Cookieland.

• • • •

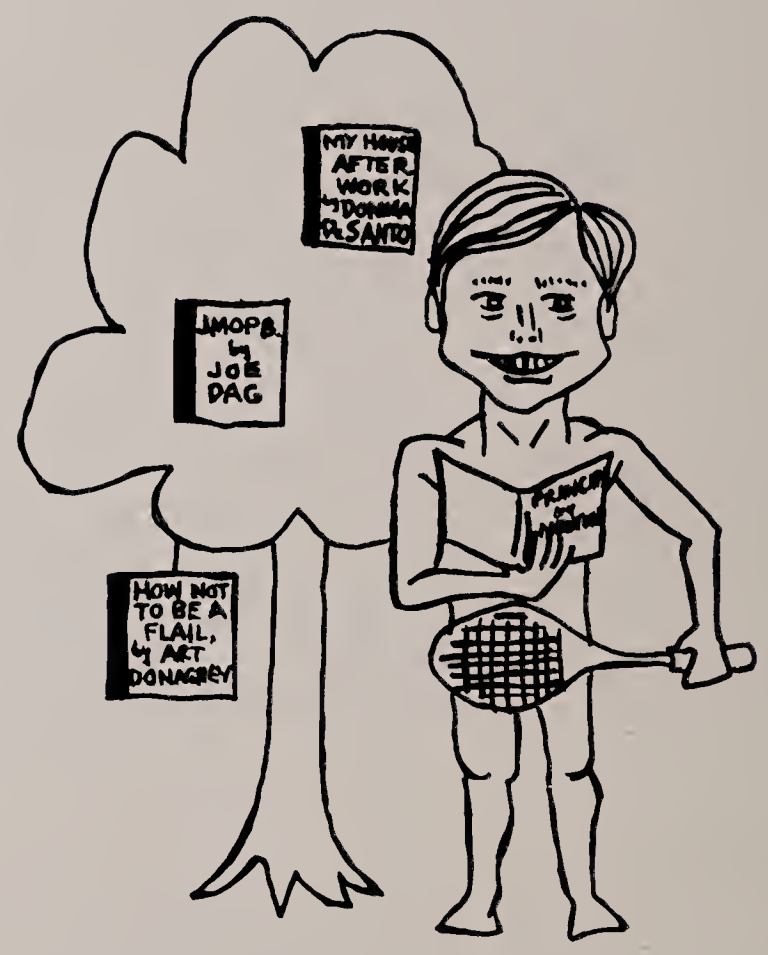

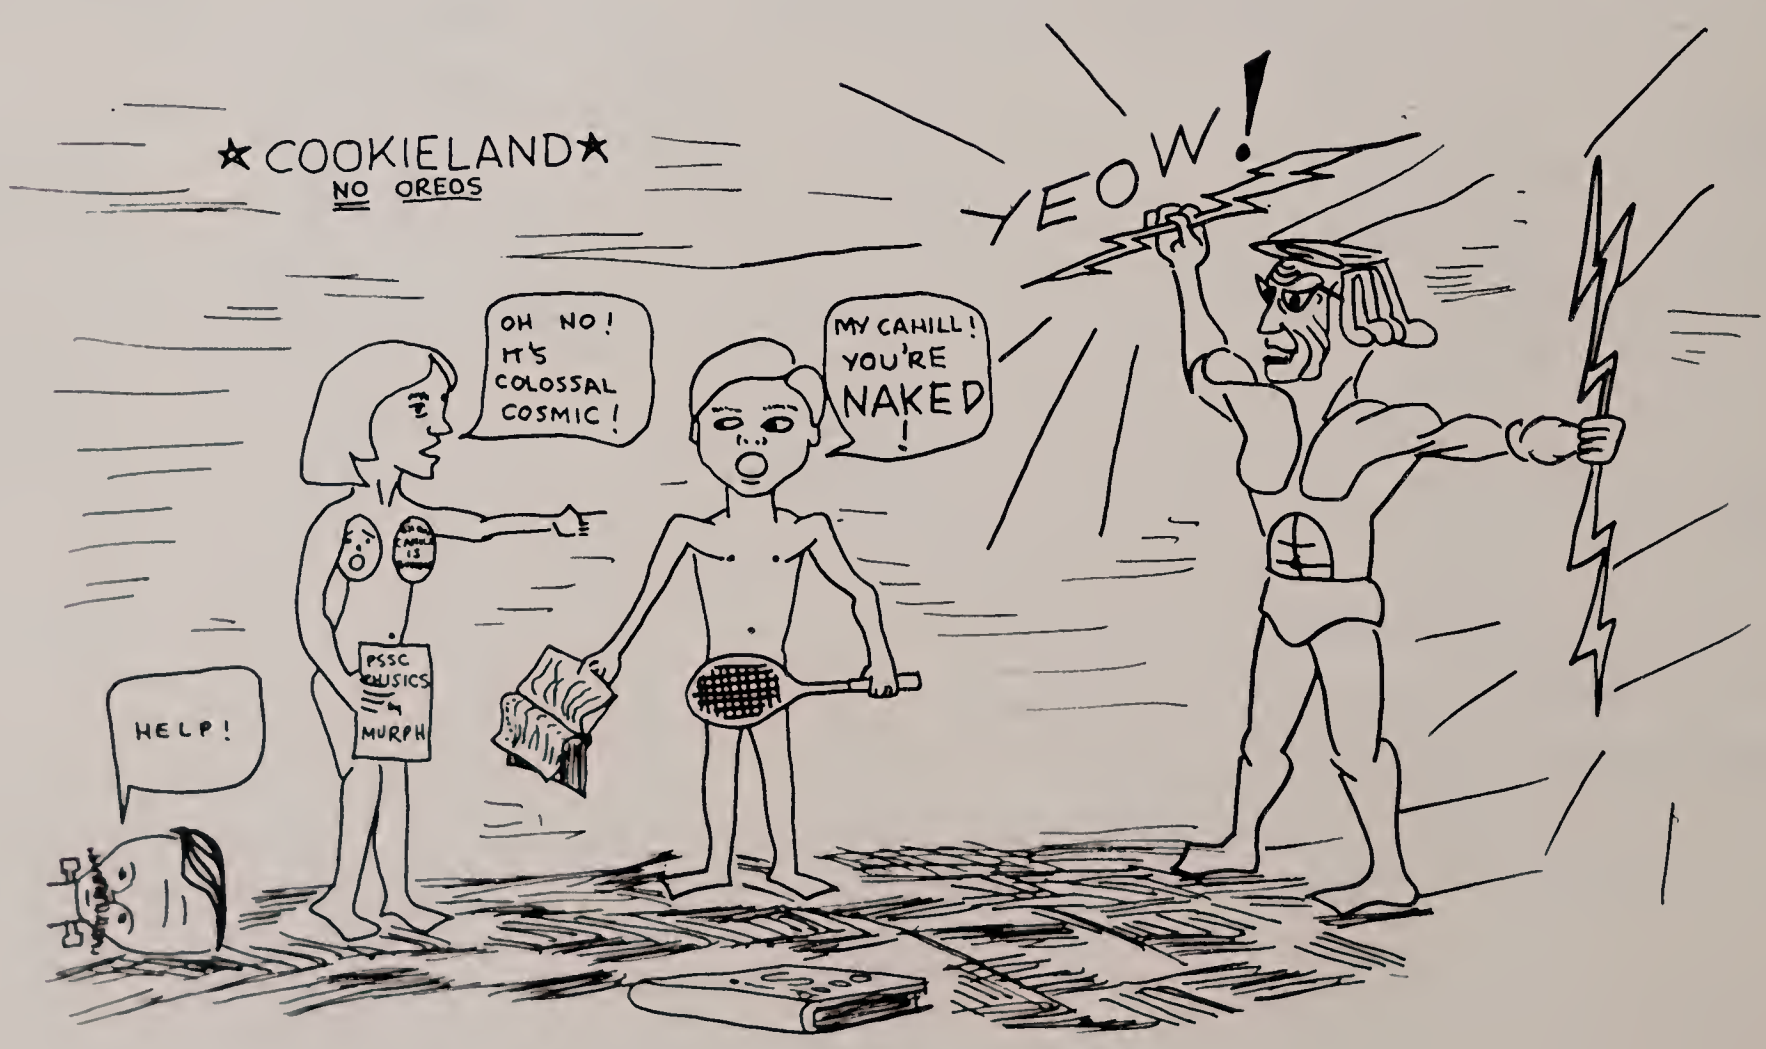

Disguised as a wandering philosopher, Blodgettstein entered cookieland and there spoke of a tree in central paradise on which grew a book that would give her infinite knowledge and power.

Finding herself now possessor of infinite knowledge, and inspired to tell others, Anne showed the book to Steven, and he partook of it as well.

Anne, being the creature that she was, could not resist the temptation. She picked the book and read of it.

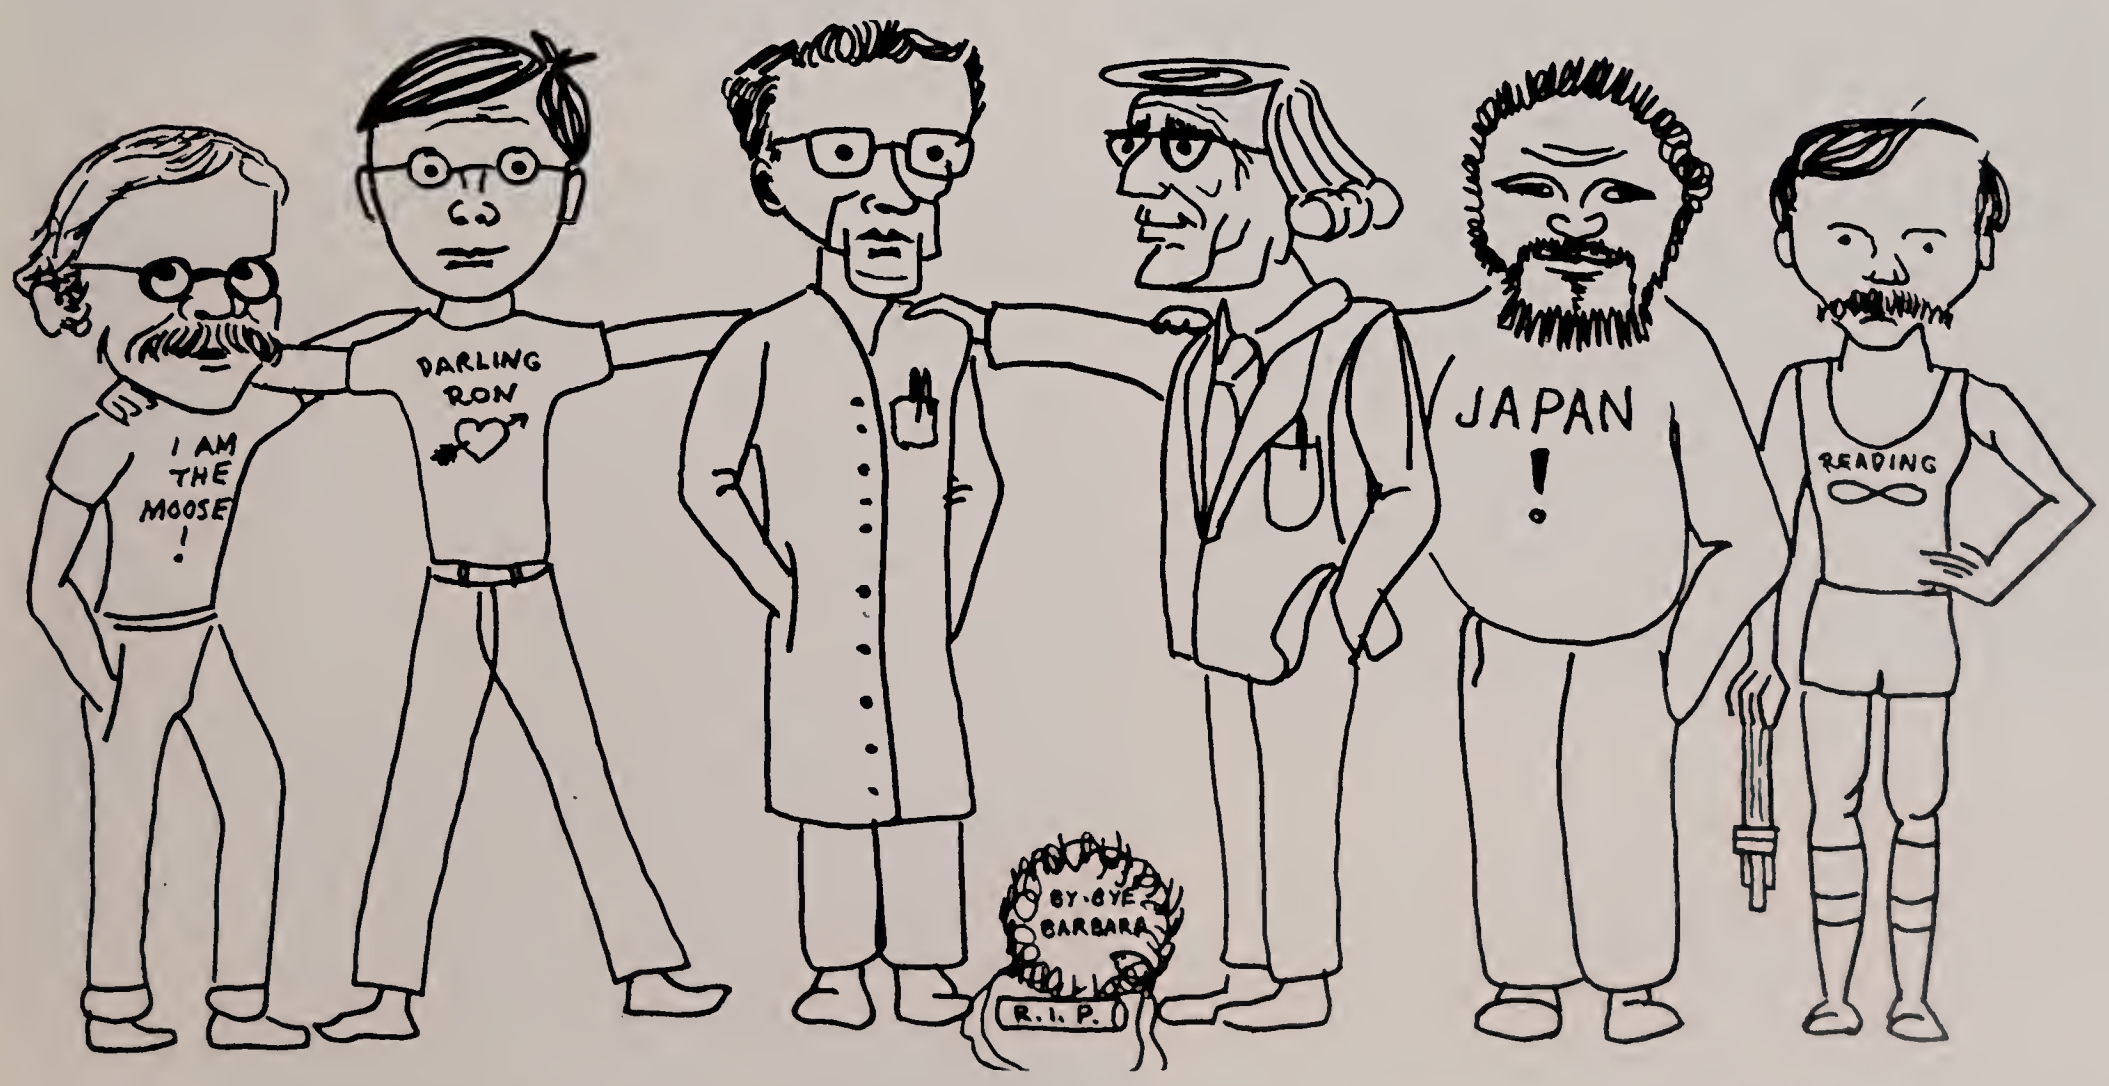

But Cahill had been watching the students from his empirical throne and his wrath was provoked. He descended upon Cookieland in fire and storm and took the book from Steve. He then sentenced the Students to 5 years at the global penitentary— R.M.H.S.

Later upon glancing at the evil book that had corrupted his students, Cahill recognized in it some of the truths of the universe.- and he was ashamed of himself. He finally became conscious of his tyranny towards Murphy and the others and decided to descend upon them and beg their forgiveness. To make up for his meanness, Cahill touched Blodgettstein and thus made him a "real" man.

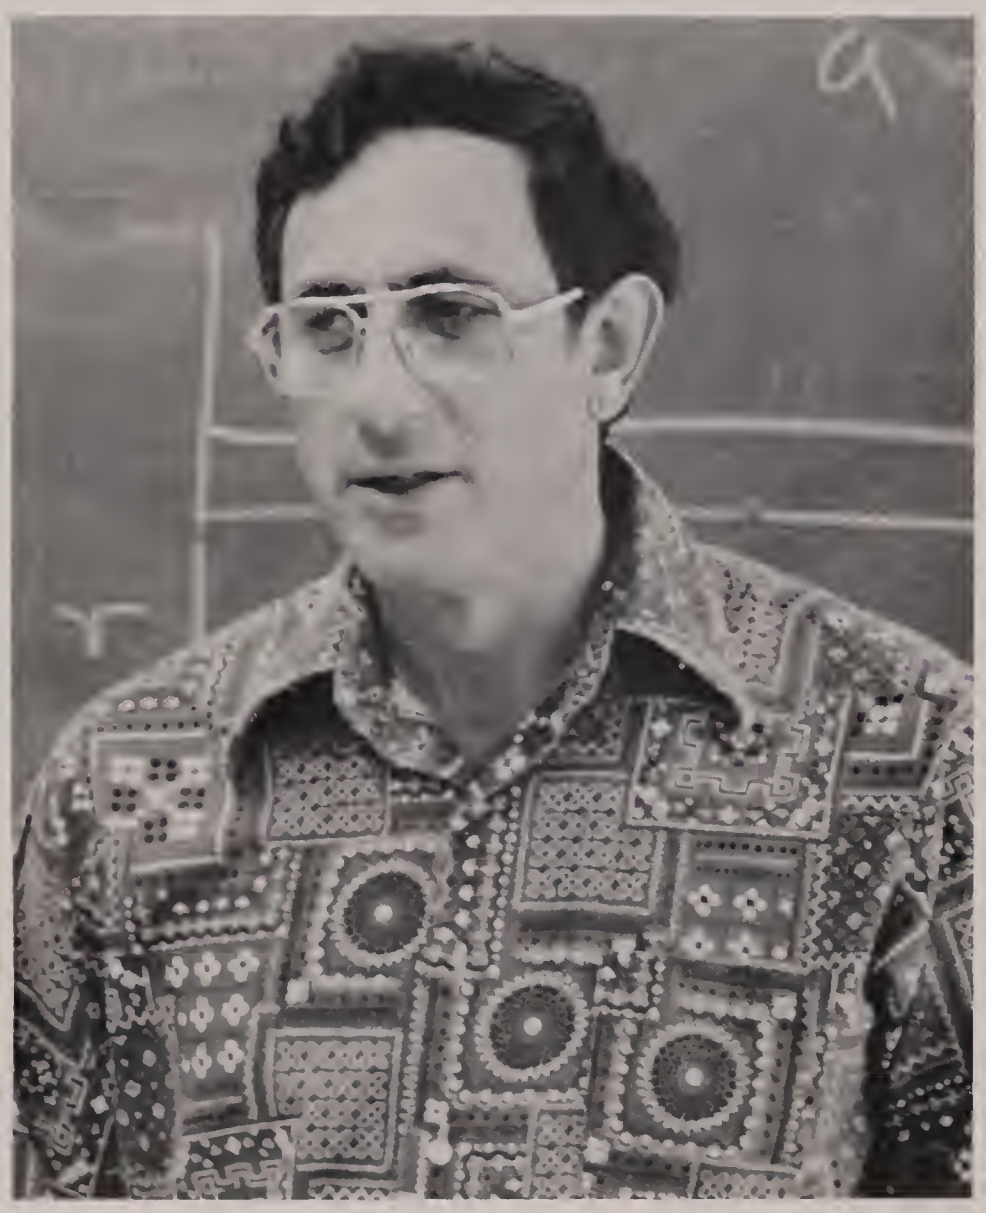

In doing so, Cahill lost his immortality - but that didn't bother him. With his new found friends, Cahill and the R.M.H.S. faculty gave the students a new insight into the nature of the real "COOKIELAND."

I learned this, at least:

that if one advances confidently in the direction of his dreams,

and endeavors to live the life which he has imagined,

he will meet with a success unexpected in common hours.

He will put some things behind,

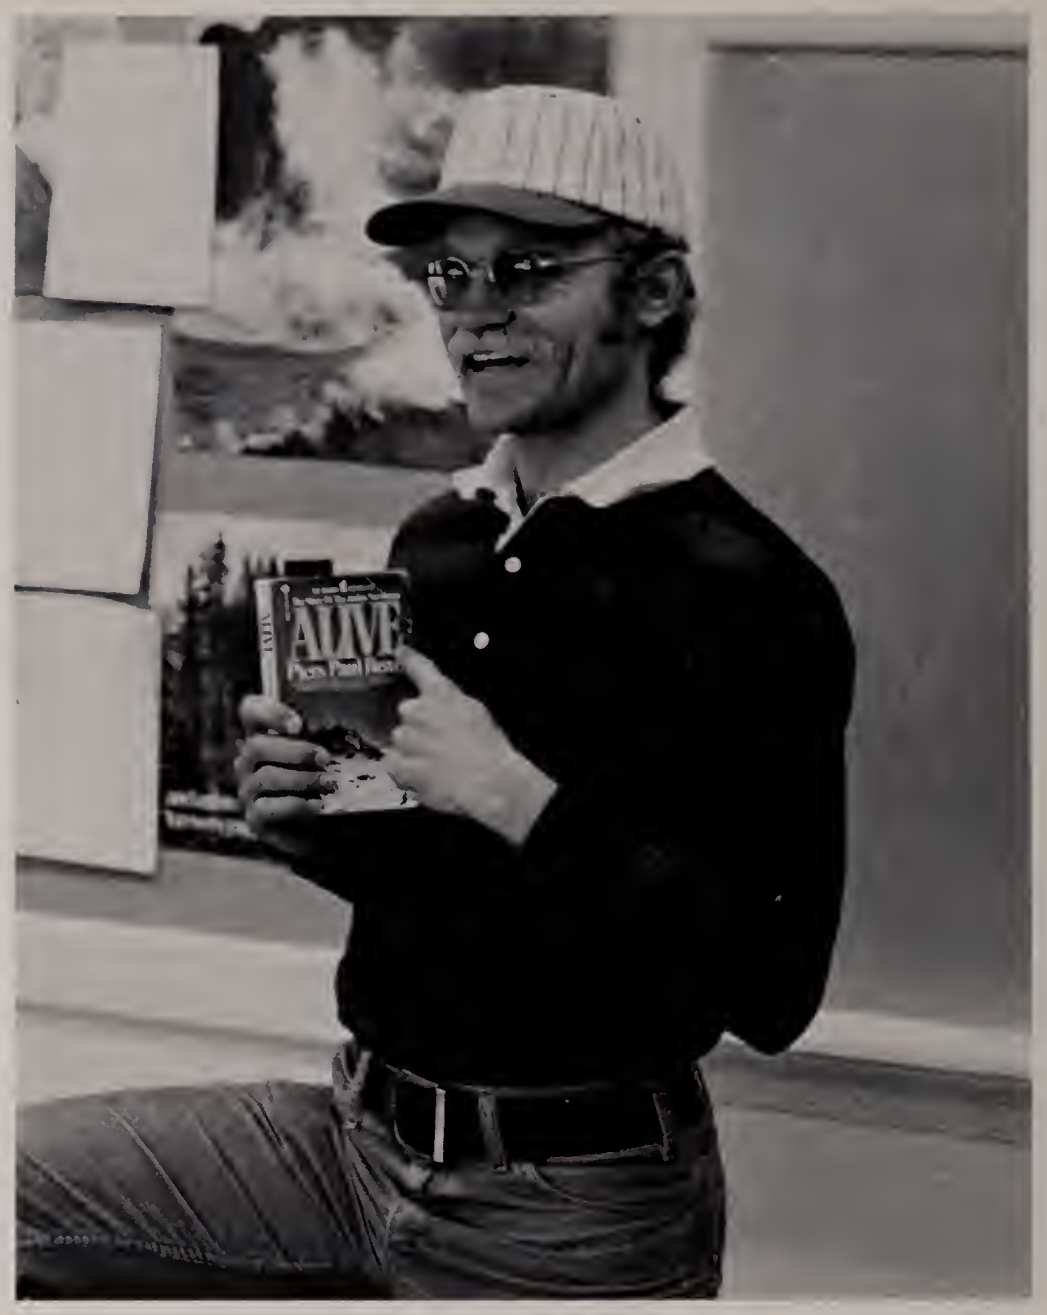

will pass

an invisible boundary . . .

and he will live with the license of a higher order of beings.

In proportion as he simplifies his life,

the laws of the universe will appear less complex, and solitude will not be solitude, nor poverty poverty, nor weakness weakness.

If you have built castles in the air, your work need not be lost; that is where they should be.

Now put the foundations under them.

Sometimes, not often enough,
We reflect upon the good things,
And these thoughts always center
around those we love,
And I think about those people
